State and Political obligation.

LTPC3003

Political theory, generally identifiable with as well as distinguishable from other related themes like political thought, political philosophy, and political ideology and like, is by all means the most encompassing intellectual activity. It includes all things like philosophy, ideology, and science. The perplexing thing about it is that right from ancient to modern times, it has been moving back and forth on the subject of "man versus state" and thereby creating paradoxes and contradictions and controversies to that extent that today it has become like a store house of odd humps and bumps.

The subject of the nature and scope of political theory in the present times assumed a significance of its own. The stir created by the conflicting versions of the leading social and political theorists of the twentieth century could not make the matters settle and the replacement of the capitalist society by the industrial society created fertile ground for the emergence of new themes, the study of which by a number of social and political theorists made the scope of political theory more diffuse and fragmented. This study includes political theory of both empirical and normative, both liberal and Marxist, both western and non-western.

COURSE 2:

Right to Information and Good Governance

By Prof. Sairam Bhat | National Law School of India University

COURSE DESCRIPTION:

Transparency and Access to Information, is pivotal to the functioning of a democracy. In the Information Age, access to data, reports, documents, etc are sine qua non of every Individual. This course seeks to provide a comprehensive learning on the Right to Information, dealing with its multiple facets from a constitutional perspective to be a Statutory right, and thereby its evolution as an executory right through administrative and judicial process. While the Right to Information Act 2005, being a Central legislation, allows State Governments to make Rules for its implementation. It attempts to create a practical regime for the exercise of the Fundamental Right to know and establishes a mechanism within the Government to facilitate the same, in an alternate to judicial enforcement. The Act also attempts to bring in transparency and accountability in the working of 'public authorities'. The interpretation of the Act has seen interesting developments, such as, which Institutions are accountable to provide information under the definition of 'Public Authority'? Whether information can be provided to non-citizens? What is the content of the 'right to Information'? What kind of information is exempted? Increasingly, the Courts have been called upon to interpret various provision of this Act, hence the case law development have contributed enormously to the jurisprudence of transparency law in India. The Course will aim to trace the legal development of the RTI and compare the development of the 'right of information' in comparative jurisdictions such as Sri Lanka USA and UK.
